

May 27th, 2025

This entry serves the purpose of delineating where my head is at and where my eyes are gazing in today's market. The last two months have been a whirlwind of emotions for active investors and steely opportunists once again made out with a few extra greenbacks. A topic we've focused on almost entirely this year, volatility, and more specifically the opportunity that arises from said, has been the poster boy we envisioned. We knew one thing would happen when T47 took the reins, and that was ample market chaos.

"The world awaits the market open today, as DJT took the oath of office yesterday to become the 47th president of the United States. The new regime is sure to bring with it ample market volatility. I believe that is going to be a major theme for investors over the next four years."

January 21st, 2025

Luke C. Cagle

I've enjoyed the tariff saga and all of the commentary, both good and bad, that comes from it. We know after last Friday's reaction that the market eats tariff news for breakfast. It's becoming immune to such notices. This is partly why we doubled down on our TSLA position around $280-290.

I'd like to comment on a few ideas that I'm holding close to heart as we head to the midpoint of the year. TSLA has been a wonderful trade and has contributed handsomely to our YTD portfolio returns. In the act of writing, I can only hope we get another flush out to the $335 level to load even more before we jump over $400/share. These are the types of trades that will make your year as an active investor, most hop off the wave before it crests.

I've recently been buying some NGVC around <$48/share. Natural Grocers is a name you most likely haven't heard of, with a market cap just over $1B. I beg everyone to go study Sprouts Farmers Market (SFM) and Caseys General Store (CASY) to understand the precedent in this investment. My average for NGVC is $46. This stock will trade north of $60 again soon and is a wonderful long term holding. You'll be hard pressed to find a better returning stock over the last 1Y or 5Y than both SFM and CASY. You would never suspect it, but baggers are all around us.

A longer term swing trade I'm going to enter very soon is DKNG. I remember when this stock IPO'd and the subsequent revaluing it experienced during the bear market of '22. I was not a fan, certainly not long term. I still will not invest in gambling companies for a long term account. That does not mean I close it off to opportunity in the near term. I believe buying this under $40/share will prove very profitable as I see a longer term trend back north of $50 this year. You will have numerous chances to buy more on the pull backs as it chops back over the moving averages. North of $40/share and this one can take off quickly.

Lastly, I've been watching EOSE for a potential investment. This one is similar to NGVC in that you can add it to a longer term account or swing trade it. I will personally be doing both. Around $5.50/share this one is very intriguing. You need to expect extreme volatility on this one. We could wake up and it might gap down 15% or gap up 100%. We understand this probability prior to investing, and accordingly manage our risk/reward profile. I think if one enters around $5.50/share, they stand the chance of making a wonderful return.

To conclude, these ideas are much easier in theory than in practice and that is because human emotions tug at the center of our being. If you can refer to this commentary at the slightest feeling of regret, you will be steadfast in the initial thesis and remain so during the process. I intend to make the bulk of my yearly portfolio gains from the four above mentioned equities.

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'L. Cagle', with a stylized, cursive script.

Luke Cagle
Cagle Family Interests, Ltd.