

October 14th, 2025

I'll start this memo with a brief update on the recent trade/investment mentions made in the 9/25/2025 writing. After that I'll touch on where my head is at and what/if anything has changed for me.

- Our CRK trade from $15.50/share has gone well with the lucky timing of their Haynesville non-core asset divestment. CRK currently trades north of $19.25/share. We continue to hold our position until north of $20/share.
 - We took a little profit on this north of $20/share as CRK got to $22/share early last week. I remain confident in this trade. There is ample support in the $16-17 range and should we see that again soon, I'll be adding to my position there. This type of stock is the ideal swing trading instrument. I don't see much reason to think this name doesn't get back to the $24+ range relatively quickly.
- I've been slowly adding to JD this quarter. Small position as of now but this is anticipating outperformance in 2026. I'm loving a few names that are trading at a price-to-sales ratio of <1, one of which is JD. From a technical standpoint, the stock is primed.
 - No update, still in a starter position for now. Won't get too aggressive here and ultimately I'm looking to trade this name back to $45/share ballpark. This is a patient play.
- I've mentioned EBAY recently and I recommend people put eyes on this name. I've got no position and contemplated adding at $88 a week or so ago. For now I'm watching.
 - Continuing to watch this name. It's been nothing but resilient for the last 20 months since I missed the boat.
- I'm trading RR right now with my initial purchase being at $2.80/share. Take 1 minute to look at the stock chart. It touched almost $6 just this week and I sold part of my position. Now trading back around $4/share as the market sold off this week, I'm tempted to add massively to my position. I think this one crosses $6/share by year end.
 - Like the above bullet reads, we made two plates at dinner on this one. I've sold most of my initial position and will let the rest ride cost free as this trade was fantastic. It's a name in a sector (AI robotics) that is seeing a raging bull market recently. I don't like to mention price targets but this one could get ridiculous if this bubble momentum continues.
- We touched on it weeks ago but we added to our long term position in FTNT after their reported earnings and fell to $75/share. This was an easy decision and even at today's prices it is a good add to long term portfolios.
 - No update, long term hold. Recommend learning about this company. It's almost a guarantee that you're sitting at a computer right now with the software installed and running 24/7 on it. That is how I found out about it ~4 years ago.
- I've been watching BRO for a potential add to my long term dividend portfolio. Great company and has retreated considerably after their shelf offering. Blue chip stock with a 12% dividend growth rate. I will most likely add soon.
 - $90/share has proven to be a floor recently and I think that is a good opportunity to add in longterm, risk averse accounts. Several insurance names have moved sideways or negative for much of the last year. I'm not exactly sure why but we made plans to add to these conservative names. Everyone needs quality dividend growing companies in their portfolios.

- I'm watching my darling TEM very closely to possibly add more around <$70. Volatile name but we stash a piece in our Roth and we trade the rest. This will be $100+ by year end.
 - Bada-bing, Bada-boom.. I've beat the drum on this one so much I can't bang it anymore. Crossed $100/share just last week. Volatile name but this is a long term investment for myself. I like to trade around the volatility as well.
 - Note, once this AI mania stops, I expect names like this to see haircuts as expectations are leveled and inflation takes the wheel. I'm not saying that to scare you away, I'm mentioning that to exaggerate the maturity in this company and to realize where the stock is in its lifecycle. Ultimately, synthetic biology will benefit more than anything else from AGI and the coming wave.
- I've recently entered CLSK around $13.75/share. I'll hold this into the year end looking for a pop into the $20/share range.
 - We wish they were always this easy. CLSK crossed $21/share on Friday and we excited our position. I see a lot of people bullish on this name and I do see where a break above $24/share could cause fireworks.
- I'm watching the entire consumer staples sector and will begin adding NGVC aggressively again once I start to see inflows. For now, I'm watching my darling rest. Would love for this name to get depressed into $32/share range or below before I need to buy again.
 - No update, continuing to watch. We maintain our long-term position and are looking to add more in due time.

Looking ahead...

There was ample entertainment late last week at the hands of Trump and I felt it was a good time to talk through this. The Nasdaq finished down over (-3.5%) on Friday and investors were left feeling pants'd over the weekend. I couldn't help but chuckle as it felt like the continuation of the same game Trump has been playing the last ten months.

From Trump's perspective, how do you get a big gain when the market has made 45+ new highs just this year? You go short. There is no other way when the market is making small daily gains for so long. As simply as you can put it, there was more money to be made on the short side. I'm completely fascinated by what Trump has been doing since taking the market over in January. We may never see another president who completely controls the world stock market the way that Trump does. Obviously Trump is not personally trading this but you can guarantee that he has people trading this for him and to use those profits to further his agenda. Hell, I'm more so on the side that China is profiting from it as well. This is the trillion dollar game that Trump is playing and for the time being, has mastered. He's doing this in two parts via tariffs: 1.) Trump is manipulating the world markets for his party's gain and 2.) He is positioning America with better trading leverage. Now I'm not writing the above to be political, but this information is critical when it comes to investing and it's certainly exaggerated in the short term movements of the market.

Like I alluded to above, this is the same game Trump has been playing all year long. You simply can't have "massive tariffs" that never actually happen. If we were to have truly massive tariffs, inflation would rage and the controlling party would lose control. Trump won't allow that to happen. We saw acute evidence of this as Trump was already running his mouth late Sunday with the comments, "Don't worry about China, it will all be fine." Having processed this, I'd like to make note of what I feel is Trumps' formula heading into year end:

$$\text{No Massive Tariffs} + \text{Rate Cuts} + \text{Strong Earnings} = \text{New Record Highs}$$

I'll add one point here as I do expect October to be volatile and the first few earnings releases could stir the pot. Once that is digested, we will see a rally by November and into the year end. The manic AI bubble will continue to add to its legend. The long term preparation I'm putting myself through currently is to grasp what names will see the most carnage once this magnificent bubble pops. The unknown part is that it could continue for much longer than we expect. To dig deeper into that thought, what signs will there be first that it's beginning to pop? I believe a slow down in the growth rate of NVDA will be the first notice. From there you'll have an opportunity to lighten the load on select names and harbor profits. Until then, we ride the wave.

Before I dive into a few select names, one other fascinating thing to me about Trump's handle on the market is the price action of gold. Everyone and their mom knew Trump was a gold bug, possibly the biggest. Biden wins in 2020 and gold falls (-22%) before bottoming in late 2022. With just that bit of evidence you could've bought gold after the 2024 election and be sitting on gains of 50% or more. Of course like other assets there will be time when gold free falls, the question is how high does it get before then.

Moving into select tickers...

I've been waiting for this time of the year as we approach Big Tech earnings and the holiday season. I continue to have hyper focus on a few select names during this run up as we look for opportunities to add during any volatile pullback like we saw on Friday. Should earnings prove sour, there will be added volatility until expectations are rebalanced and investors can appreciate the latter reports. As of today, I'm not as aggressively positioned as I plan to be in a month's time. I'd like to see a little surety in earnings before I get fully positioned for year end.

- I was as happy as anyone in October 2024 when RDDT turned into a goliath. I was ecstatic to sell for $150/share, that of which was acquired around $50/share in mid-2024. I was quickly proven a fool as the stock appreciated to over $225/share. Luckily, this is a young name that provides ample opportunities and I was able to re-add again in 2025 for around $85/share. From the April 2025 tariff bottom, this name returned over 300%. I'm currently watching it very closely in hopes it can get to the gap around $160-170/share. At that point I would be aggressively adding. Do I think it reaches that? Likely not, as this name garners a lot of attention and it is a very powerful company that has seen tremendous amounts of institutional money flow into it over the last 12 months. I'm okay with anyone nibbling at it <$200/share.

- In today's market environment I'd be remiss not to mention a few names that I'm actively trading that are seeing tremendous price action. In no particular hierarchy, RR, BZAI, and SLNH. Now you've read my recent actions around RR, but the other two I've yet to mention in these writeups. I'll note here these are names I've pegged as trading extremely strong and I do not intend on holding any of these in long term accounts for now. Not to mention, they are thematically set up perfectly. During October I'll be looking to add to my current positions should there be an opportunity. I'd be okay with adding SLNH below $2.50 per share and BZAI below $5 per share. As for RR, I made note of this name several times recently and at its current price ($6.50), I'm not recommending you go out and buy this name. I was directing that at $2.80 per share. Ultimately, there is a lot of rerating potential here between these names and I'm expecting to profit from it handsomely.
- With the last few weeks being what they've been, I can't help but mention a darling of mine EOSE. This is a name I've pounded the drum on from $3.50 per share onwards. We discussed its "Stage 2" breakout back in the summer. Since then, it has been nothing short of a firework and ironically enough I've only grown more confident. If you've read these for a few years, you'll remember a name, BE, that I mentioned back in the summer of 2024. Take 10 seconds to review Bloom Energy (BE) and you'll see a similar potential offering here in EOSE. I'll add aggressively to EOSE should we see a pullback. I see this name continuing its manic run into the year end as the company's potential is rerated. I will not be shocked to see a 3 or 4 in front of this name soon.
- Lastly, I want to mention a new name here in ACHR. I've recently started a position in this name at $11.75 per share. I think there is downside support at $11.40 and again at $10 per share range. I'll add should we see that. For now, this is a slower hold for me and I expect it to run hard sometime before year end as the AI carry trade continues into every nook and cranny in the market.

I believe with sound entry prices and acute attention, you can set yourself up with a very Merry Christmas with the tickers discussed today. These are not slow movers, these are Usains. Feel free to reach out to discuss any names you're taking action on or pondering ideas around.
